With deep experience in matters involving insurance and health care litigation, John Reale helps his clients combat fraudulent and abusive claims practices. From identifying and evaluating suspected fraud to developing and implementing effective litigation and deterrent strategies, insurers turn to John to help them reduce exposure and recover payments obtained by fraud.

Confronting health insurance fraud, waste and abuse

John represents large health and property and casualty insurers across the country, as well as others impacted by fraud, helping them confront the business and litigation challenges associated with suspected claims fraud. Through early stage collaboration and leveraging available technology, John helps his clients develop and implement litigation, claims handling and fraud deterrent strategies.

John has a wide range of industry experience, and he handles complex litigation and consulting involving systemic fraud. He has extensive experience pursuing fraud recoveries in federal and state courts in civil RICO and qui tam suits involving a wide range of issues, including medical necessity, corporate practice of medicine, licensing, kickbacks, self-referrals and manipulation of billing codes.

John has also helped clients in federal and state litigation involving alleged federal and state False Claims Act violations, disputes under ERISA and the federal securities laws, commercial class actions and toxic torts.
