Data privacy and information security considerations coupled with global regulatory compliance obligations are increasing and becoming more complex. Businesses, consumers, and individuals need protection — Trisha Sircar provides clients with practical guidance and creative solutions to manage global privacy and data security risks and compliance challenges.

Operating at the intersection of technology and law

Trisha heads our Privacy, Data and Cybersecurity Practice and is Katten's Co-Privacy Officer. She collaborates with clients across all industries, including financial services, retail, manufacturing, education, new and emerging technology, professional sports, media, travel, and health care. She counsels them on managing and mitigating the risks associated with the collection, use and disclosure of personal data and confidential information. This involves strategizing with clients to develop and operationalize a comprehensive and effective global privacy program and assisting them in assessing and managing their day-to-day privacy compliance needs and risks. Trisha helps clients with developing policy and procedures, administering training, incident response, responding to data subject requests, drafting privacy impact assessments, negotiating cross-border data transactions, and providing counsel on strategic transactions, including mergers and acquisitions, divestitures, diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI), bankruptcy, cyber insurance coverage selection, artificial intelligence (AI) and other strategic transactions.

Trisha advises on the practical application of complex state, federal and international privacy and information security legislation and regulation. She helps clients navigate regulatory requests and audits. Trisha also reviews, drafts and negotiates global privacy, data security and records management provisions in third-party contracts and cross-border data transfer agreements, as well as assists clients with developing vendor management and records management programs. Additionally, Trisha counsels on multi-jurisdictional incident response obligations and supports clients with developing incident response programs and tailored privacy
