Alex Haddad maintains a broad corporate practice advising clients on mergers and acquisitions, private equity, corporate governance, and commercial contracting matters.

A business-minded approach to complex problems

With a diverse background in public service, litigation, and corporate practice, Alex brings a unique perspective to the legal matters he handles. Before joining Katten, Alex worked at an AmLaw 200 firm in Chicago and Cleveland focusing on litigation. He also previously served as an intern for US District Judge Solomon Oliver, Jr., in the Northern District of Ohio, and as a Civil Division intern with the US Attorneys' Office in Cleveland.

While earning his bachelor's degree, Alex served as a legislative intern for the US House of Representatives, a parliamentary intern for the House of Commons in London, and interned with the International Trademark Association.

Presently, Alex focuses his practice on middle-market, private equity transactions and represents founders, buyers, and sellers of businesses ranging from manufacturing to professional services in the United States and overseas. In addition, Alex enjoys pro bono legal service and assisting nonprofits with corporate governance and formations issues as they arise.
