The financial services industry is under constant scrutiny from regulators. Peter Wilson's familiarity with the business of financial services firms, as well as the regulatory landscape, allows him to quickly assess clients' potential legal exposure and identify the best solutions. He defends financial services firms and public companies in regulatory inquiries, criminal investigations and high-stakes litigation, advising them on how to interact effectively with the government and private plaintiffs to resolve matters efficiently and favorably.

Regulatory insight

Peter understands how regulators think and set priorities. He's successfully guided clients through probes by the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority and options and futures exchanges, and in related private litigation, in matters involving allegations of market manipulation, fraud, and antitrust violations. His work often involves disputes over derivatives and other complex financial products. With his ability to speak the language of the financial world and his fluency with its most esoteric products, Peter doesn't need time to understand the issues his clients are facing.

Peter's practice also involves representing public companies and their directors and officers in a range of sensitive civil, criminal, and internal investigations and related litigation. He has particular experience investigating and defending against allegations of accounting fraud, foreign corruption, and insider trading.

Peter's government experience, including his work enforcing the Dodd-Frank Act, positions him to craft arguments that resonate with regulators and courts. Whatever the issue, Peter seeks to bring about speedy resolutions that allow businesses to keep operating as profitably as possible.
