Jason Jarvis focuses his practice on representing private lending institutions, banks and borrowers with respect to a variety of financing transactions. His diverse array of experiences in law and business put him in a unique position to identify transaction risks and assist his clients in understanding these risks.

A depth of corporate legal knowledge

Prior to joining Katten, Jason worked in restructuring at a large corporate law firm where his representations included assisting a debtor in securing a broadly syndicated multibillion-dollar credit facility. During law school, he served as an extern in federal district court and was published in the Northwestern University Law Review. Before pursuing his legal career, Jason worked in public accounting, and he is a licensed CPA.
