Christina Raskin advises clients and negotiates a wide variety of complex real estate transactions. She represents institutional lenders, banks, real estate investors and property owners in the financing, acquisition and disposition of industrial, office, retail and multi-family residential real estate, including transactions involving secured and construction lending, multi-property portfolios, and single-property deals. She also represents both commercial landlords and tenants in the negotiation of office, industrial and retail leases.

A comprehensive approach to real estate transactions

Christina believes it is critical to learn the fundamentals of her clients' business needs and objectives to ensure the real estate transaction is crafted in a way that is properly aligned with her clients' long-term goals, so that she can anticipate and address potential issues long before they become real-world problems, and so she can efficiently and effectively advise her clients in a manner tailored to what works best for each client.

While attending law school, Christina served as a Notes and Articles Editor for the Georgetown Journal of International Law (formerly known as Law and Policy in International Business).
