Noé Burgos represents banks and borrowers in domestic and cross-border transactions. His practice is primarily concerned with supply chain finance and similar financial arrangements.

In-house knowledge speeds transactions

Prior to joining Katten, Noé supported the global transaction banking division of an international bank as in-house counsel. Noé negotiated commercial banking services contracts, particularly in the area of trade finance. He worked with corporate clients and financial institutions in Europe and Latin America. This knowledge of internal hurdles helps him to manage processes more efficiently and achieve faster turnaround times.

Additionally, he provides counsel on the implementation of new services and products in various jurisdictions.

He began his legal career at another financial institution where he advised on investment adviser regulation and securities matters.
