Alexa Rollins represents and counsels public and private companies on securities regulations, corporate governance, including Environmental, Social and Governance (ESG) matters, and capital markets and other securities transactions, such as initial public offerings, going-private transactions, and U.S. registration matters.

Dedicated to client service

Alexa is dedicated to providing top service to her clients. By developing a deep understanding of clients' businesses, she is able to maintain long-standing relationships with clients and provide legal counsel that specifically addresses each client's unique needs.

Thus far, Alexa has worked with clients in various industries, including food and beverage, education, and technology, as well as in diverse markets, spanning from North America to Europe to Australia. Such clients include domestic and international public and private companies and their respective boards and officers, whom she advises on securities law compliance, stock exchange requirements, corporate governance issues, proxy advisory firms, and ESG compliance and reporting.

Dedicated to public service

In addition to aiding clients in a variety of corporate transactions, Alexa maintains an active pro bono practice in which she advises nonprofit organizations on board governance and filing requirements and represents victims of domestic violence and asylum seekers, among others.
