Allison Clark works in commercial litigation with a focus on employment law. She strives to be an exceptional communicator, keeping her clients supported and informed throughout the entire litigation process.

A detail-oriented and creative approach to complex legal issues

While in law school, Allison was an online articles editor for Northwestern Law Review and externed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. She also worked with Northwestern's Wrongful Convictions Clinic and volunteered for Legal Aid Chicago.

In her previous career, Allison worked in marketing as well as on political campaigns, where she developed effective communication and leadership skills. Allison brings these skills into her legal practice by working closely with clients from a point of understanding and patience.
