Charles Manning provides legal support to a variety of healthcare industry players conducting complex transactions, including private equity-backed management entities, physician practices and health systems, through primary and ancillary transaction document drafting, robust due diligence review and management, in-depth research, and regulatory and compliance guidance. He also represents healthcare provider clients on matters involving state and federal antitrust laws, the Stark Law, and the Anti-Kickback Statute, and other regulatory and corporate matters such as billing compliance, commercial contracting, the corporate practice of medicine, and licensing. Charles also provides healthcare regulatory counseling to a wide range of trade associations at the state and federal levels supporting independent medical practices.

A detail-oriented approach that stems from a focused background

Charles has a thorough understanding of the healthcare industry after spending four years in healthcare management consulting at Navigant and Kaufman Hall, where he advised clients on strategic planning and operational improvement initiatives and managed multimillion-dollar engagements.

During law school, Charles served as the publication editor for the Washington University Journal of Law and Policy and interned with the Bureau of Consumer Protection at the Federal Trade Commission and the Consumer Protection Branch of the Department of Justice.
