Taylor Stilwell advises clients across the healthcare industry on a wide variety of transactional, regulatory and operational matters.

Practical guidance and a solutions-oriented approach

Before law school, Taylor gained experience across a range of industries, building a practical foundation that informs her client-focused approach to legal work. She then developed a diverse skill set through roles at law firms, in-house legal departments and nonprofit organizations while at law school. That background shapes a practice centered on healthcare transactions, regulatory compliance, and government and internal investigations.

Representative Experience

Healthcare Transactions

- Represented private equity sponsors, management services organizations, health systems, and other investors in buy-side acquisitions of physician practices, by managing legal diligence, identifying regulatory risks related to corporate practice of medicine, state licensure, fee-splitting, and reimbursement arrangements, and drafting and negotiating transaction documents.
- Advised lenders in the acquisition and restructuring of healthcare companies experiencing financial distress, with a focus on regulatory compliance.
- Represented physicians and physician groups in sell-side transactions, advising on deal structuring, conducting regulatory diligence on corporate practice of medicine and reimbursement issues, and negotiating related transaction documents.
- Assisted on post-closing integrations of large healthcare platforms, including regulatory compliance structuring, operational transition planning, and coordinating required notices.

Healthcare Regulatory and Compliance

- Advised hospital systems and other healthcare clients on compliance under the Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act
