Jeremy Stevenson focuses his practice on government and public finance matters, serving as bond, disclosure, underwriter's and issuer's counsel on tax-exempt and taxable financings for states, cities, transportation agencies, universities, utilities and 501(c)(3) organizations. His work extends from the Midwest to the East Coast, assisting in public offerings as well as private placements for clients. Jeremy has experience drafting official statements, trust indentures, bond purchase agreements and ordinances, as well as legal research and analysis on municipal and securities law matters.

A foundational background of industry knowledge

Prior to joining Katten, Jeremy interned at the Court of Federal Claims, where he developed the ability to spot and address issues for clients early on, as well as with a professional baseball team. His time with the professional baseball team allowed him to gain experience from an in-house perspective to better serve the firm's clients, while also improving his contract drafting skills that he uses to help the client achieve their objectives.
