Ayeisha Bailey draws on a background in education, hands-on courtroom experience and a strong record in legal writing and advocacy to support clients in commercial litigation matters.

From the classroom to the courtroom

Before law school, Ayeisha taught middle school English and served as the English department head. That experience strengthened her flexibility, adaptability, leadership, organization, attention to detail and ability to work with people from many different backgrounds.

In law school, Ayeisha externed for Susan G. Komen, where she drafted contracts and conducted due diligence to ensure that current and future relationships aligned with the organization's mission. She also participated in the Texas A&M University School of Law Criminal Defense Clinic, where she led the representation of clients facing misdemeanor charges in Tarrant County Criminal Court. She received the CLEA Outstanding Clinic Award at the law school's 2026 commencement ceremony.

Ayeisha participated on the Texas A&M University School of Law Alternative Dispute Resolution Advocacy team and was awarded membership in The Order of the Barrister. She served as a senior staff member of the Texas A&M Law Review and graduated ninth in her class.
