As Deputy Managing Partner of Katten's London office, Terry Green is a trusted advisor to social media platforms and digital service providers, family offices and luxury retailers. He serves as a project leader for their international business operations and frequently addresses issues related to financing, regulatory, social media and cybersecurity, litigation, insolvency and corporate matters.

Terry focuses on digital service regulation and, in particular, the Online Safety Act (OSA), including laws imposed by the UK Office of Communications (Ofcom), as well as the global nature of the OSA. It will affect all platforms with links to the United Kingdom. He provides straightforward counsel on complicated issues related to social media platforms that often cannot be easily addressed.

Always available, always improving

Terry maintains a global practice, which has seen him manage projects for his clients in the United Kingdom, Europe, the United States, the Middle East, Asia and Africa. He makes himself available to his clients at all times and believes in working closely with each of them. Terry listens to their feedback and regularly strives to improve and enhance the value he provides.

In all his projects and transactions, Terry aims to ensure that all parties walk away from any deal feeling like they have been treated fairly. He takes a long-term view and knows that one deal, if done correctly, can lead to many more for his clients and their counterparties. That forward-looking approach has been critical when acting for his digital services, high-net-worth and luxury retail clients.

A flexible, global approach

Given the global nature of his work, Terry has strong business relationships all over the world. These relationships have proven invaluable when he works on complex matters that require established trust as well as flexibility.
