

62nd Annual Intellectual Property Law Conference

Presented by the John Marshall Law School

November 2, 2018

Kristin Achterhof, national co-chair of the firm's Intellectual Property Litigation practice, will participate on a panel addressing current developments in international and domestic trademark law on Friday, November 2 at the 62nd Annual Intellectual Property Law Conference. The conference covers global developments in patent, trade secrets, antitrust, trademarks, copyrights, IP management and in-house counsel practice, entertainment, and information technology and privacy law. It features judicial, administrative, practitioner and academic presenters from around the country who share their insights into the most important IP developments and their future impact.
