Katten will present “Securing Success: Decoding SEC and Other Cybersecurity Requirements in an Intensifying Threat Environment” at 4:00 p.m. (ET) on Thursday, October 26. The event will be presented both virtually and in person at Katten's New York office. Speakers including Capital Markets partner Elizabeth McNichol; Financial Markets and Funds partner Richard Marshall; Privacy, Data and Cybersecurity partner and co-privacy officer Trisha Sircar; and Securities Enforcement Defense partner and co-chair Danette Edwards will discuss the growing number of cybersecurity threats that public and private companies face in today's digital world while they simultaneously navigate new regulatory disclosure obligations and pressure from the government, investors and others to mitigate cybersecurity risks. Key topics will include:

- A comprehensive overview of the SEC's new cybersecurity rules for public companies, recent rule proposals for brokers and investment advisers and other regulatory requirements
- Insights into evolving compliance expectations and best practices
- Strategies to proactively mitigate cybersecurity risks
- Intersections between artificial intelligence and cybersecurity
- Data care considerations for companies of all sizes, from startups to more established institutions
- The public-private partnership: working effectively with law enforcement counterparts and understanding national security implications related to incidents
