

Nathaniel Lalone Discusses Damages in Non-Default Losses With Risk.net

August 30, 2023

Financial Markets and Funds partner Nathaniel Lalone spoke with Risk.net regarding the likelihood that members of the London Metal Exchange (LME) might be required to contribute to payments of damages or lawsuit settlements resulting from the cancellation of nickel trades last year. The LME's rule book, confirmed by Hong Kong Exchanges and Clearing (HKEX), states that damages awarded in lawsuits cannot be allocated to members as non-default losses (NDLs). Nate stated, "[The LME's rules] seem fairly strictly drafted to cover bona fide treasury losses only. So, unless there was some meaningful nexus that connects the damages awarded to LME Clear's treasury operations, I think it would be quite difficult to characterize such damages as NDLs." A court decision stemming from suits related to the March 8, 2022 cancellation event is expected in early October.
