

Derek Ladgenski Quoted in S&P Global on Persistent Private Credit Demand

March 26, 2026

Katten Private Credit Partner Derek Ladgenski was featured in an S&P Global article examining how borrower demand for private credit is expected to persist in 2026 despite a lower interest rate environment.

Derek discussed how private credit borrowers accept the premium costs associated with private lending because of the long-term benefits and strategic advantages those arrangements provide. "There is a premium there that these borrowers are willingly acknowledging and buying because they know that they're brokering a relationship for the next several years with parties on the other side who, when times are bad, are going to be able to respond quickly and also have quite a bit of dry powder to help them grow," Derek said.
