

Derek Ladgenski Quoted in Chief Investment Officer on Private Credit Market Evolution

May 21, 2026

Katten Private Credit Partner Derek Ladgenski was featured in a Chief Investment Officer article examining Apollo Global Management's plans to implement daily pricing across its public and private credit platform and what the move signals for the broader private credit market.

Derek noted that Apollo's push toward daily valuations carries significance well beyond the technical mechanics, offering a forward-looking perspective on the asset class's trajectory. "Beyond the immediate headlines around its technical implementation, Apollo's move to daily valuations is — most importantly — yet another signal to the investing world that these asset classes, especially private credit, are going to continue their ascent in total volume and have cemented themselves as go-to destinations for even the most sophisticated institutional dollars," Derek said.

He added that while daily valuations will not create liquidity on their own, they represent a meaningful step in the market's evolution. "While daily valuations, on what have been traditionally seen as relatively illiquid assets, will not directly or magically create liquidity out of thin air, they do help evolve the market in that direction," Derek explained.
