

Partner Joshua Rubenstein Comments on DOMA Ruling in Stamford Advocate

July 2, 2013

Joshua Rubenstein, head of the Trusts and Estates practice, spoke with the Stamford Advocate on the Supreme Court decision striking Section 3 of the Defense of Marriage Act. The ruling will allow all lawfully married same-sex spouses to claim marital rights and privileges under federal law, including retirement and tax benefits. While the impact of the case in states that do not recognize same-sex marriage is yet to be determined, Josh suggests that if same-sex couples want federal benefits, they should get married. If they are married, they should live in a state that recognizes the marriage. (“DOMA Ruling Means Big Retirement Benefits for Gay Marrieds,” June 28, 2013)
