

Katten CEO Noah Heller Comments in The American Lawyer on the Firm's Move Upmarket

March 28, 2016

Katten CEO Noah Heller was quoted in an article in The American Lawyer regarding the firm's move upmarket in 2015. With revenue per lawyer up 6 percent, to $900,000, and profits per partner up more than 8 percent, to $1.51 million, the gross revenue at Katten rose 4.5 percent in 2015. Noah said, "Sustained growth in profitability and revenue is more of a goal than crossing any threshold. It certainly gives me great pride as a leader of a law firm that my partners had a wonderful year." The article highlighted some of Katten's innovative matters for helping its growth, including the closing of the first securitization originated by a wholly foreign-owned company in China, a major litigation win for the blockbuster film Ted and a pro bono victory that established that a labor union may be sued for sex discrimination by a transgendered ironworker. Noah, who at 40, is the Am Law 100's youngest leader, noted that a goal for the future is to provide a clear path for up-and-coming millennial attorneys at the firm.
