Jason R. Gorczynski structures, negotiates and closes real estate deals to bolster his clients' bottom lines. A recognized leader in real estate law and in sports law, Jason takes a business-first, practical approach to his law practice, making sure that transactions support his clients' business goals and position them for future success.

A businessman who practices real estate law and sports facilities law

Jason regularly takes the lead in highly complex real estate deals in the sports industry, which require his management of large teams of attorneys. He has represented various National Basketball Association (NBA), Major League Baseball (MLB) and Major League Soccer (MLS) team owners in numerous transactions, including large-scale construction projects, short-term and long-term financings, complex parking operations, land assemblage and development and long-term leasing of arenas from governing bodies. With the new sports business model involving the development of mixed-use facilities adjacent to venues, Jason increasingly taps into his broad real estate background to represent team owners in the sports industry.

Jason also routinely advises financial institutions lending to MLS and NHL team owners, private equity firms, REITs, developers, financial institutions, family offices and high-net-worth individuals in a wide array of commercial real estate transactions, including stabilized, value-add and opportunistic profiles.

His experience spans the full breadth of real estate assets, going beyond arenas and stadiums to include industrial warehouse and distribution centers, manufacturing centers, cold storage warehouses, marinas, student housing, self-storage, hotels and resorts, multifamily apartment rental buildings, office towers (central business district, suburban and medical office buildings), residential and office condominiums, retail shopping centers and mixed-use facilities.
